

CHAPTER III

THE NEW TESTAMENT STRUCTURE

Basic Structure

This chapter sketches the original organization of the universal church according to the evidence of the New Testament taken alone. As respects authority the approach will be to determine what positions have authority and to consider the rest as functions. This procedure is possible not only because an either-or matter is under consideration, but more particularly because authority includes function. One cannot suppose that a function is seen as such only because the evidence recorded happens to be insufficient to show that it was really an office. That approach becomes an argument from silence and shifts the burden of proof onto the negative. The negative burden of proof in this instance would be impossible since the only available evidence would pertain to function, which is part of the larger concept of office.

Authoritative Offices

Lord

Authoritative

The first place of service in the church is that of Lord. Jesus Christ alone possesses this office. “All authority was given to me . . . go, therefore . . .”<sup>1</sup> The authority he has is a supervisory authority because as Head of the church His work involves the supervision of others. Because He faithfully accomplished His appointed service He was given His exalted authority, the order in the types of activity conform to a basic principle of church leadership: ability and service before rank and authority. Jesus Christ is both Savior and Lord (Ephesians 5:23; Titus 1:4; 2 Peter 2:20; 3:2, 18) in that order (Ephesians 1:20 + 21-23; Philippians 2:5-8 + 9-11).

General

“All authority was given to me in heaven and on earth.” Because Christ died to be Savior of all, the Father appointed him to be Lord of all, that every knee should bow and tongue confess him as Lord to the Father’s glory (Philippians 2:10-11). Lordship is a general office.

Apostle

Terminology

The second position of service in the church is that of apostle. In the New Testament more than twenty-five persons bear the label “apostle” in the general sense of missionary, or “one sent.”<sup>2</sup> Of these, fourteen may be singled out as apostles in an added special sense, (a) having in common certain distinguishing marks and (b) being perceived as peculiar from the rest.<sup>3</sup> The distinguishing mark of the original twelve, Matthias, and Paul was (1) their being personally chosen by Christ as (2) special eyewitnesses of his resurrection.<sup>4</sup> The combination of these two elements is important. Over five hundred could bear witness to the fact itself; but were not all officially chosen, appointed, endowed, commissioned, and guided. Many preached the resurrection who had not seen it. If there had been no difference between the apostleship of “the Twelve” and that of others called “apostles,” there would have been no more reason formally to replace Judas than any one of the others.<sup>5</sup> None of the others are not known to have been replaced in this way. Paul’s manner of sending and calling the others who are called apostles, also seems to indicate a difference between himself and them (Colossians 4:7-11; 2 Timothy 4:9-13, 20-21; Titus 3:12-13). Finally, no one except the Twelve-plus-Paul ever refers to himself as an apostle.

That the Twelve were perceived as a special group comes in the very references to them as “the Twelve” (Matthew 10:1-2; John 6:67, 70, 71; 20:24), then “the Eleven” after Judas Iscariot committed suicide (Matthew 28:16; Mark 16:14; Luke 24:9, 33; Acts 1:26), and then “the Twelve” again after the selection of Matthias (Acts 6:2). John 20:24 is significant in that “the Twelve” occurs in a passage where the number had been reduced by the death of Judas. Paul conceived of himself as equal with the most important apostles (Galatians 1-2) and was accepted by them in this capacity (Galatians 2:8-9). In that Paul was also accounted an apostle in the technical sense, there were “twelve” apostles in the same sense as there were “twelve” tribes of Israel.

Characteristics

Authoritative. In respect to the reason for, and the nature of, supervisory authority, it is axiomatic that the highest present rank in an authoritative system is itself necessarily authoritative at least as long as the ultimate authority is absent. This axiom is true for the reason that if supervisory authority is needed at all, it is needed for the orderly and efficient functioning of the system as/where it is functioning. The church partakes of supervisory authority by virtue of its Head who has such authority. His appointment of the apostles gave them the ultimate earthly leadership during his absence.<sup>6</sup> In such a position, what they did they were “authorized” to do and what they were authorized to do involved supervising the activities of others. In addition to making converts, they disciplined and set them in order. Christ’s authority not only passed down to them as functionaries, but down through them as officers. Since his authority was always passing through them, and since he himself was absent during their whole ministry, one may say that authority inhered in the apostleship itself.

As one views the functioning of supervisory authority, the right to lead on the basis of service performed (1 Corinthians 9:7) is sometimes difficult to distinguish from the right to lead based on authority given (Matthew 28:18-19). Particularly is this the case with church leadership, where authoritative right always includes service right. Moreover, certain passages describe church authority as exclusive of “lordship,” as when Jesus says that his apostles are not to exercise lordship like the kings of the Gentiles.<sup>7</sup> Such statements, however, involve a pejorative use of the word “lordship”; because Jesus who had the authority of Lord (John 13:13) conducted himself in the attitude of Servant (Luke 22:25). They strike at the motives of the person rather than the fact of his authority, the manner of using rather than the right to use. If rightful authority includes able service, no one minds being subject to it. The question, then, is not so much what is done, but the basis on which it is done.

Certain statements in Paul's writings seem to presuppose a right to lead on the basis of authority given. In connection with disciplining the Corinthians, he uses language that would seem presumptuous outside the context of a recognized formal authority. Among these instances is 1 Corinthians 4:21, where he asks whether they would have him come "with a rod, or in love and a spirit of gentleness." Note the otherwise idle and boastful threat in 2 Corinthians 13:2, "If I come again, I will not spare" (cp. 2 Corinthians 1:23; 10:8-11; 13:10). The right to discipline has legal implications, but Paul wanted to handle problems in personal love.

One commanding situation in Paul also brings up the distinction between his right in Christ and his preference for beseeching in love. He says regarding his desire to keep another man's slave, "Though I have all boldness in Christ to enjoin what is appropriate, yet for the sake of love I beseech instead . . . that your goodness be not of necessity, but of free will" (Philemon 8-14). Paul had confidence in Philemon's "obedience" (21). He uses the strong verb διατάσσω in 1 Corinthians 16:1 in reference to his "giving order" to the churches of Galatia about the offering. The case for formal right should not be pushed too far in connection with commanding statements, for the commanding idea itself says nothing particularly about official right over someone else as is obvious in Gamaliel's "command" to fellow members of the Sanhedrin (Acts 5:34-40). The same may be said of "setting in order" (1 Corinthians 11:34; cf. Titus 1:5). Even Paul's foregone right to command support (1 Thessalonians 2:6-9; 2 Thessalonians 3:8-9) does not rest on more than the right of service (1 Corinthians 9:7-19); yet in the case of Onesimus the slave of Philemon, right by grant may be intended.

The apostles' appointment of the seven in Acts 6:1-7 indicates supervisory authority especially since they took the initiative in this new matter (cp. Acts 14:23; contrast Titus 1:5). These kinds of observations on the functioning of the apostleship confirm the fact that the Lord himself appointed them as authoritative leaders with responsibility for establishing the church during his absence.

General. In commissioning the apostles, Jesus sent them to the whole world, to every nation, to every classification of mankind (Matthew 28:19; Mark 16:15, 20; Luke 24:47; Acts 1:8). Recounting their triumphant establishment of the universal church in a hostile world, the book of Acts traces the spread of the gospel from Jerusalem to Rome, emphasizing the Apostle to the Circumcision and the Apostle to the Gentiles (cp. Galatians 2:8). According to Galatians 2:7-10 Peter and Paul concentrated respectively on the Circumcision and the Uncircumcision, an exhaustive listing from the Jewish viewpoint (cp. Ephesians 2:11ff., etc.). Paul speaks of his anxiety for all the churches (2 Corinthians 11:28; cp. 1 Corinthians 4:17; 7:17; 16:1). The apostles' letters in the New Testament canon are directed to individuals, churches, and territories in broad range throughout the northern Mediterranean: Syria, Asia Minor, Greece, and Italy. The scope of the apostolic ministry was as wide as the scope of the Christian gospel. Apostleship is therefore a general office.

Elder

Terminology

Usage of the word elder. A third position in the church of Christ is elder, or presbyter. Of the seventy-five times πρεσβύτερος (presbyteros) and its cognates occur in the New Testament, sixteen are clear references to an office in the church. Other usages refer to apostles (3), Jewish elders (33), men of old (1), old men (10), and the twenty-four elders of the Apocalypse (12).<sup>8</sup> The word, therefore, has general and technical denotations. In technical references to the office of elder, the word seems to retain its meaning of “older,” as in 1 Peter 5:1-5, where Peter exhorts the younger to be subject to the elder, who had responsibility for, and over, the flock; hence, the eldership is an office of personal Christian maturity.

Equation of elder and bishop. “Bishop” ἐπίσκοπος (episkopos) is another term used in the New Testament to refer to the office of elder. The primary evidence for equating them is interchangeable use of elder and bishop in common reference. Two contexts provide the primary evidence for equating them. In Acts 20 the Ephesian elders (20:17) are to watch out for the flock in which the Holy Spirit has made them bishops (20:28). Luke calls them “elders”; Paul calls them “bishops.” In Titus 1 Paul explains that he left Titus in Crete to appoint elders (1:5), men blameless in their domestic relations because bishops (1:7) must be blameless as God’s stewards.

The two terms are not used in a way that allows one to be within the other, as if bishop were a more narrow category than elder. In Acts 20:17 and 28 the historian and the apostle refer to the same group of people; in Titus 1:5-9 Paul lists qualifications for one office. Bishop and elder are not simply used in the same context; they are used interchangeably in the same context with reference to the same predicate.

In conformity with Paul’s interchange of bishop and elder in Acts 20 and Titus 1, he gives a common description of elder and bishop. He says in 1 Timothy 3:4-5<sup>9</sup> concerning a bishop that he must be “a person who rules [προΐστημι, proistēmi] his household well, having children in subjection [ὑποταγή, hypotageē] with all respectfulness; but if a man does not know how to rule [προΐστημι] his own house, how will he take care of [ἐπιμελέομαι, epimeleomai] the church of God?” (a) The qualifications laid down in Titus 1 under the double label “elder-bishop” parallel the ones here under the single label “bishop.” (b) 1 Timothy 3 speaks of the ruling-caring for, idea in connection with the work of “bishops” and later associates it with that of “elders” in 5:17, “Let the elders who rule [προΐστημι] well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who work in word and teaching.” Working “in word and teaching” (5:17) also parallels 3:2, which stipulates that a candidate be “able to teach.” While requiring high personal and domestic characteristics for deacons in 3:8-13, Paul does not require of them the ability to teach or the responsibility of “ruling” the church as he does of bishops (3:2, 4-5), and these are the very two elements joined together in 5:17. (c) Finally, Paul combines bishops and deacons in Philippians 1:1 as in 1 Timothy 3, where “bishop” in turn equals the “bishop-elder” of Titus 1. He seems to have had the same position in mind, then, in Titus 1:5-9 (bishop-elder), 1 Timothy 3 (bishop), 1 Timothy 5:17ff. (elder), and Philippians 1:1 (bishop).<sup>10</sup>

In further confirmation of the identity of eldership and bishopric, there is no New Testament unit of immediate context that ever mentions bishops and elders together, so as to imply distinctness.<sup>11</sup>

Primary evidence for equation lies in (1) the interchangeableness of terms in common reference, confirmed by (2) common description and (3) absence of distinguishing reference in combination. One must conclude from this evidence that ἐπίσκοπος and πρεσβύτερος are interchangeable in the New Testament.<sup>12, 13</sup>

Equation of elder-bishop and pastor. Perhaps on the background of Zechariah 13:7, “I will strike the Shepherd and the sheep will be scattered” (cp. Matthew 26:3 = Mark 14:27), Jesus conceived of his disciples as a flock, especially in John (also in Matthew 9:36 = Mark 6:34; Matthew 25:32). Pastors are mentioned in Ephesians 4:11 among the ministries Christ gave after his ascension. “Pastor,” or “shepherd” (ποιμήν, poimēn), is used only twice more outside the gospels, both times in reference to Christ (Hebrews 13:20; 1 Peter 2:25). The question is raised then as to what a pastor is in Paul’s list of ministries.

Two contexts shed light on the ministry indicated in Ephesians 4:11: Acts 20:17-35 and 1 Peter 5:1ff. In both places the shepherding metaphor is combined with the elder-bishop terminology discussed above. The elders of Ephesus (Acts 20:17) were to fulfill the ministry of bishops (20:28) in the “flock” that they were to “feed” (ποιμαίνω) and protect from wolves (20:28-29). This same set of figures (elder, bishop, pastor) appears in the 1 Peter passage, where elders (5:1) are exhorted to pastor the flock (ποιμαίνω, 5:2) as bishops (ἐπίσκοποι, 5:2) anticipating the return of the Chief Shepherd (ἀρχιποιμήν, 5:4). “Pastor” evidently means the same thing as “elder” and “bishop” because the pastoring idea is incorporated at least twice in a series of interwoven metaphors dealing with the work of elder-bishops.

Ποιμαίνω, the verb of ποιμήν, is an appropriate word for depicting the work of elder-bishop because it carries the two elements of ruling and providing for the flock. Ruling is especially prominent in Matthew 2:6, “For out of you a governor will come, who will shepherd-rule [ποιμανεῖ] my people Israel.” This quotation from Micah 5:2 uses ποιμαίνω where the LXX (Micah 5:1) has τοῦ εἶναι εἰς ἄρχοντα as the translation of the Hebrew (Micah 5:1), לְשָׁמֶן וְאֶרְχֶנָּה being words in the respective languages for the ruling idea. Three passages in Revelation speak of the Son as ruling (ποιμαίνω) all nations with a rod of iron: 2:27; 12:5; 19:15.

Feeding is a common English translation of the other element in ποιμαίνω. Jude 12 is one example, “. . . shepherds that feed themselves [έαυτούς ποιμαίνοντες, heautous poimainontes].” Similar usages appear in Luke 17:7; John 21:16; Acts 20:28; 1 Corinthians 9:7; 1 Peter 5:2; and Revelation 7:17. Feeding a flock of sheep corresponds to teaching a group of people. Thus as respects description, in the work of a pastor there are the same two responsibilities of elder-bishops: ruling and teaching.

Three considerations taken together form the basis for equating pastors in Ephesians 4:11 with elder-bishops: (1) pastor is an expressive figure for leadership responsibilities that emphasize ruling and teaching; (2) the shepherding metaphor elsewhere describes the elder-bishop’s work; (3) Paul omits elder-bishops in this list of ministries where pastor appears.

Occasional equation of elder-

bishop-pastor and teachers. Teaching is a prominent part of the elder-bishop’s work in Acts 20:28-32; 1 Timothy 3:1-7; 5:17; Titus 1:5-9. It is only natural that on occasion “teacher” should be used by metonymy for it. In Ephesians 4:11 the hyphenated expression “pastor- teacher” brings this point into view. In a serial balanced construction Paul says, “καὶ αὐτὸς ἔδωκεν τοὺς μὲν ἀποστόλους, τοὺς δὲ προφήτας, τοὺς δὲ εὐαγγελιστάς, τοὺς δὲ ποιμένας καὶ διδασκάλους.” Sharp’s Rule says that the article is not repeated when καὶ connects epithets applied to the same person or thing.<sup>14</sup> The conclusion regarding this passage is somewhat obscured by the possibility that a writer may for certain purposes view two different groups as one in terms of a common larger category that is in turn set in parallel to another category in his mind. In light of the example in question, Ephesians 2:20 and 3:5 are instructive, for “apostles and prophets” is there governed by one article while in 4:11 it is not.<sup>15</sup> As a result the general rule about definite synonyms in series must be taken in conjunction with the writer's present intent of category contrast determinable only from context

That τοὺς δὲ ποιμένας καὶ διδασκάλους is part of a balanced construction seems to be as important to the matter of identification as the omission of a second article, for by the general grammatical construction one gains insight into the way Paul presently conceptualizes the set of parallel categories. In Ephesians 4:11 he balances off apostles against prophets, then against evangelists, and then against pastors and teachers. These are grammatically parallel examples of positions that are Christ's parallel gifts to his church for maturation.

The last position in 4:11 is twofold in nature, being a work of oversight and education. These aspects of authority and teaching correspond to the ones united peculiarly in elder-bishops in 1 Timothy 3:1-7; 5:17; Titus 1:5-9; and possibly Acts 20:28 (feeding = teaching) plus 1 Peter 5:2 (overseeing = authority).<sup>16</sup> The composite nature of Ephesians 4:11d inheres, then, in the combination of (a) appropriate syntactical parallelism and (b) familiar descriptive characteristics identified elsewhere in elder-bishops.<sup>17</sup> (c) Finally, one may observe in 1 Corinthians 12:28, 29 that God set in the church apostles, prophets, and teachers. Neither 1 Corinthians nor Ephesians uses the words "elder" or "bishop" presumably because "pastor" and "teacher" mean the same office.

Summary. In summary, four terms are used in the New Testament to refer to one position: "elder," "bishop," "pastor," and sometimes "teacher." The equation of elder and bishop rests primarily on (a) full interchange of terminology with the same reference within Acts 20:17-35 and Titus 1:5-6, confirmed by (b) common description (didactic, authoritative, and local) and (c) lack of distinguishing reference in combination. Elder-bishop is then equated with pastor in that (a) pastoring is an expressive figure for the prominent responsibilities of elder-bishop (ruling and teaching); (b) the pastoring metaphor is used to describe the elder-bishop's work; and (c) Paul omits elder-bishop in the one place where pastor is used of a church office. Elder-bishop-pastor evidently equals teacher in Ephesians 4:11 and 1 Corinthians 12:28, 29 since in the first passage "teacher" forms with "pastor" a hyphenated expression that parallels "teacher" standing alone in the second.

Characteristics

Local. Every example of elder (= bishop-pastor-teacher) is local; every local church whose organization is mentioned had elders. As respects distribution of examples, elders are known to have existed in every area whose evangelization is recorded in the New Testament: Jerusalem, cities of southern Asia Minor, cities of northern Asia Minor, Ephesus, Philippi, cities of Crete, as well as perhaps Rome, Antioch, and Thessalonica.<sup>18</sup> Particularly significant is the observation that "bishop" is local in contrast to later usage and practice so that no positive evidence exists for a general office by that name in the usage of ἐπίσκοπος or its cognates.<sup>19</sup> Thus there is uniformity in the localness of the office and in the local churches' having the office.

Authoritative. One strand of evidence useful in showing that the eldership is an authoritative office comes in four of the words used to refer to its activity. Προΐστημι, "to stand before,” roughly corresponds to the English word “preside,” and is a mild authority word. It is used of church leadership in Romans 12:8; 1 Thessalonians 5:12; and 1 Timothy 5:17. Always local in reference, the word is clearly used of elders only in 1 Timothy 5:17. The first two passages show there was authority at the local level; the last shows it was resident in the elders.

Ὑγέομαι, “to lead,” refers to church leaders in Acts 15:22; Hebrews 13:7, 17, 24. The references in Hebrews are indefinite, but Acts 15:22 refers to Judas Barsabas and Silas, who were perhaps elders in the Jerusalem church.<sup>20</sup> The word is capable of authority content as demonstrated in Luke 22:26, where it is in contrast to διακονέω and compares with κυριεύω.

Ποιμαίνω, “to shepherd,” carries two meanings that correspond to the activities of a shepherd: feeding and ruling.<sup>21</sup> The word is used particularly of church offices only in Acts 20:28 and 1 Peter 5:2: “feed the flock/church.” Ἐπισκοπέω, “to oversee,” appears only in Hebrews 12:15 (indefinite) and 1 Peter 5:2, the latter speaking of elders.

Strong verbs for authority such as (κατα)κυριεύω are not used of elders in the New Testament perhaps because these words do not preserve the proper balance between authority and service. All the verbs that are used of elders are capable of including authority, but none of them necessarily do so.

Another strand of evidence is found in the comparisons used with eldership. In 1 Timothy 3:5 Paul draws a parallel between the home and the church when he says, “If a man does not know how to rule his own home, how will he take care of the church of God?”<sup>22</sup> Actually a man’s responsibility as head of the home is more than a comparison with his work as leader of the church. The one is an example of the other because there are real elements common to both. (1) Authority is involved in being head of the home, an authority like Christ’s as head of the church (Ephesians 5:22-23). More importantly, (2) connecting father and elder establishes a model by which to think of the eldership and gives a feel for the way an elder is to carry his authority in the church: as a loving father does in the home and as Christ does in the church. Finally, (3) it puts the headship in the context of service. As Christ is both Savior and Lord, so the husband is helper and head, and the elder is servant and ruler.<sup>23</sup>

A third strand of evidence for the eldership as an authoritative office comes in certain examples of operation. The relief offering from Antioch was sent to the elders (Acts 11:30) even though men had been chosen to distribute relief goods (Acts 6:1-6); this is similar to the previous practice in Jerusalem of laying offerings at the apostles’ feet (Acts 4:35, 37; 5:2) though they did not distribute them (Acts 6:2). This procedure pictures the apostles and later the elders as men who were responsible for such matters, but who did not themselves perform the work: supervisory authority. The conference on circumcision in Acts 15 shows the elders gathering with the apostles to consider the problem raised by certain men who had gone out from Jerusalem preaching to Gentiles the necessity of circumcision and allegiance to the law of Moses. They deliberated the problem with the apostles and joined in an official statement on behalf of the Jerusalem church that these Judaizing teachers had not been sent out by them. Paul’s summons to the Ephesian elders in Acts 20 seems also to imply that these men were the responsible leaders of the church there.

In summary, evidence for authority in the eldership comes from appropriate word associations confirmed by example. These interrelated strands of data are particularly close in 1 Timothy. Speaking of elders’ qualifications in 3:5, the apostle parallels the home and the church. This parallel involves especially προΐστημι, a potential authority word applied to the husband in

3:4, 5 and to the elder in 5:17. Having made the parallel between the home and the church as regards leadership, Paul applies the same potential authority term to both husband and elder in close context. Under such circumstances one expects continuity of meaning. Authority is an ingredient in being head of the home; hence, it is in the church. The ability to use authority in combination with other, dynamic factors is common to both institutions, and success at using it in the one is presumptive evidence for ability to use it in the other. (1) Potential authority words are applied to elders and to (2) certain illustrative comparisons like shepherding and being a husband. (3) Elders in their operation demonstrate authoritative leadership.<sup>24</sup>

Non-Authoritative Functions

Evangelist

Terminology

A fourth place of service is that of evangelist. Εὐαγγελιστής occurs three times in the New Testament: Acts 21:8 of Philip; 1 Timothy 4:5 of Timothy; and Ephesians 4:11 of a gift to men. This slim evidence is appreciably increased by another consideration. Timothy is called both “apostle” (1 Thessalonians 1:1 + 2:6) and “evangelist” (2 Timothy 4:5). The appropriate inference seems to be that in some sense they are alike. Apostles and evangelists are in parallel in Ephesians 4:11. One infers that in some sense they are different. The proposed solution is that “apostle” in the strict sense is parallel to, and distinct from, evangelist. “Apostle” in the general sense equals evangelist. This solution accomplishes two important things: (1) it assigns a formal category to those men who were not in the Twelve-plus-Paul. (2) It gives a greater range of data from which to gain an understanding of the evangelist’s role.<sup>25</sup>

Characteristics

General. If Philip were the only example of evangelist-apostle, one might argue that evangelist is a local position since several years pass between his coming to Caesarea in Acts 8:40 and Paul’s visit with him there in Acts 21:8. Obviously, general ministry takes place in a series of locations; so the time in any one city is relative and not essential to the question of local versus general.<sup>26</sup> Caesarea may simply have been a kind of central headquarters for the movements of Philip, where he maintained a house for his family (cp. Acts 8:40). Εὐαγγελιστής (and ἄγγελος in Revelation 1-3) is a mobility term and so is especially suitable for a general ministry. Since Barnabas, Apollos, Silas, and Timothy went from city to city in their ministry, the work of evangelist-apostle is to be classified as general ministry.

Non-authoritative. The description of evangelists’ work does not carry it beyond the category of function. None of the authority words applied to elders are ever used of evangelist, prophet, or deacon. No activity of an apostle-evangelist illustrates an authority resident in his position.

The work of Timothy and Titus in Crete forms no clear exception to the non-authoritative nature of the evangelist’s work. Titus’ “appointing” elders (Titus 1:5) might be construed as the exercise of supervisory authority.<sup>27</sup> Timothy and Titus did not initiate the idea that there should be elders (as the apostles initiated the idea that seven should be chosen to serve tables in Jerusalem), nor did they initiate their appointment in the cities where they were working. (1) In both cases Paul had left them behind to finish what he had begun (Titus 1:5; 1 Timothy 1:3). (2) Furthermore, he addressed detailed instructions to them in the event that he should not soon return (1 Timothy 3:14-15). If authority was operating in these cases, it was an apostolic authority mediated through the evangelist.<sup>28</sup> Timothy and Titus may be viewed as extensions of the apostolic office, sent by Paul's authority, and laboring under his specific written authority. These men did not simply walk onto the scene and begin setting the churches in order.<sup>29</sup>

Prophet

Terminology

In the New Testament προφήτης, “prophet,” occurs mostly in the historical books and mainly in connection with Old Testament prophets,<sup>30</sup> John the Baptist,<sup>31</sup> and Jesus.<sup>32</sup> In addition, however, are about a dozen passages that refer to prophets in the church.<sup>33</sup> 1 Corinthians 12:28-29 and Ephesians 4:11 seem to be clear technical usages of prophet as potentially parallel to apostle, evangelist, and pastor. The twofold expression “apostles and prophets” evidently refers to two classes of persons,<sup>34</sup> as does “prophets and teachers” in Acts 13:1. Three men are called prophets: Agabus (Acts 13:27-28; 21:10), Silas, and Judas (Acts 15:32). Philip had four daughters who prophesied (Acts 21:9). In the group of Barnabas, Symeon, Lucius, Manaen, and Saul some were prophets (Acts 13:1). In places like Jerusalem, Antioch, and Corinth men did the work of prophet. Whereas elders, etc., might also be called “prophets” for having the prophetic gift, some men seem to have been prophets in parallel to elders, apostles, and evangelists.

Characteristics

Non-authoritative. Among the examples of prophets functioning in the New Testament, nothing seems to indicate that they exercised supervisory authority over their hearers. This picture accords well with that of the Old Testament prophet who stood as a purely charismatic leader among the people rather than in the government. Authority resided not in his position in the nation's political structure, but in his message from God. Likewise church prophets ministered, not from a position of authority, but from a gift of revelation. With no example of supervisory authority and no appropriate principle to invoke by which it may be presumed, prophet falls in the category of function and therefore is not in the church's pattern of authority flow, or organization.

Extraordinary. Prophets appear as communicators of messages from God. Sometimes their prophecy was prediction, as with Agabus concerning the famine (Acts 11:27-28) and the bondage of Paul (Acts 21:10-11). More often it was communication. Paul's admonitions to prophets in 1 Corinthians 14 focus on the importance of prophesying as distinguished from speaking in tongues without communicating a message. This prophesying, however, has a different emphasis from teaching generally, so that prophets and teachers may be listed side by side.<sup>35</sup> The difference between them seems to lie in the particular reference to divine endowment, or revelation: “But if something is revealed to one who is seated, let the first be silent” (1 Corinthians 14:30). Whether special prediction or general communication, prophesying looks at the origin of the divine message being dispensed, rather than at the dispensing of the divine message itself.

General. Like their Old Testament counterparts, New Testament prophets as prophets were potential for general function. The nature of their ministry was general in application, for neither predicting nor revealing is local perforce. Accordingly, prophets went down from Jerusalem to Antioch (Acts 11:27; 15:22, 27, 32) and to Caesarea (Acts 21:10) as prophets. Judas and Silas were either elders or general members at Jerusalem (Acts 15:22), but they went to Antioch and functioned there as prophets. Indeed, there were prophets “in the church” at Antioch (Acts 13:1). Furthermore, Agabus lived in Judaea from the time of Acts 11:27 to 21:10—over fifteen years; but these men could, and did, move outside their normal area of service from time to time. Prophet, therefore, was potential for general function.

At the local level prophet was distinguished from elder by being non-authoritative and from deacon by being extraordinary, though, of course, a deacon might have the gift of prophecy.<sup>36</sup> Likewise, at the general level prophet was distinguished from apostle by being non-authoritative and from evangelist by being inherently extraordinary. Authoritative vs. non-authoritative, ordinary vs. extraordinary, and general vs. local are the three pairs of variables by which positions in the church are definable.

Deacon

Terminology

The last position to be defined is the diaconate. In almost every case διάκονεώ, διάκονος, and διάκονία refer to ministry in a general, non-technical sense. Some passages are aside from the church altogether, as in Matthew 8:15 (= Mark 1:31; Luke 4:39), where Peter’s mother-in-law “ministers” to the disciples. Others are descriptive of activities by general membership, as in Acts 11:29, where διάκονία is the “relief” sent to Jerusalem from Antioch in anticipation of the famine. Sometimes those words are descriptive of other positions in the church besides “deacon,” as in Romans 11:13, where the apostle Paul magnifies his “ministry” to Gentiles.

The only clear technical references to deacons come in the salutation of the Philippians letter and in 1 Timothy 3:8-13. In the first case διάκονοι are parallel to ἐπίσκοποι and in the second case qualifications are being listed for deacon. To these examples may probably be added the seven who were chosen “to serve tables” in Jerusalem (Acts 6:1-7), but they are not designated by the term under consideration.

On the basis of Romans 16:1; 1 Timothy 3:11; 5:3-16, some exeges have defended the existence of “deaconesses” in the early church.<sup>37</sup> As respects the larger question of the positive New Testament pattern for church unity, this problem need not be solved. If 1 Timothy 3:11 speaks of deaconesses under the word γυναικες, the mention of them amid statements about deacons makes deaconess not so much a separate function, as a sub-category of the same function: “service” to the Christian community. Certain services to female members could more properly and reputably be fulfilled by women or by husbands (διάκονοι) and wives (γυναῖκες) together. The relationship between deacon and deaconess could be as follows:<sup>38</sup>

Fig. 12. Diaconate: Deacons and Deaconesses

οι διάκονοι
ο διάκονος 1 Tim. 3:8-10, 12-13	η διάκονος Rom. 16:1; 1 Tim. 8:11 (γυνή)

There seems to be, however, no sure exegetical base on which to build a case for the presence of official deaconesses in the first-century church.

Characteristics

Local. The examples of deacons in the above passages are in local situations: at Philippi (Philippians 1:1), Ephesus (1 Timothy 3:8-13), Jerusalem (? Acts 6:1-7), and even Cenchrea (Romans 1:1). 1 Timothy, like Titus, is not dealing with one city, but is only particularizing for that city how a person ought to conduct himself in the house of God wherever it is.

Non-authoritative. There is no primary evidence that the work of deacon involved supervisory authority in the position itself. The impression left by 1 Timothy 3 is that these men worked under the elders in whatever capacity they were needed. Whereas in 3:1-7 elders are said to be responsible for “taking care of” (and later for “ruling”) the church, this language is not repeated for deacons. Instead, by serving as deacons, they “gain good standing” (3:13), an expression more appropriate to reputation than office. The seven in Jerusalem show in their serving tables the kind of service to the Christian community that deacons might perform. Primary evidence can carry the description of deacon only as far as formal function.

Arguments for Further General Organization

The Jerusalem Conference

Nature of the Conference

Upon cursory examination the conference on circumcision recorded in Acts 15 might be classed with the councils of Nicaea, Constantinople, Chalcedon, etc.<sup>39</sup> It would be viewed as an intermediate level of organization standing above the leadership of the local churches, a fact that would change significantly the organization outlined above. Important dissimilarities exist, however, between this gathering and the councils; so it is termed here a “conference.”<sup>40</sup>

The Jerusalem conference was a meeting of two churches, not a general assembly of official delegates from all over Syria. It was comprised of Paul, Barnabas, and others from Antioch (Acts 15:2); the apostles and elders of Jerusalem (15:3, 4, 6, 22, 23; 16:4), and unofficial persons from the Jerusalem church.<sup>41</sup> The procedure was orderly, but not necessarily formal. Whether anyone presided cannot be determined from the record. There was no decision as such, only a course of action taken to correct the difficulty and that was done by consensus. Although Paul and Barnabas took part in the discussion, the final action was taken, not by the group conjointly, but by Jerusalem only (15:22-29, 33). It therefore was not a council.

Purpose of the Conference

The men of Antioch went up to Jerusalem (1) in order to deal with a problem at the source of the problem, not at the “source” of the church. They conferred with Jerusalem rather than Caesarea or Samaria because the Judaizing teachers had come from there (15:2, 24). Going to the source in this instance was especially expedient. What Jerusalem taught would be highly influential since the other apostles labored there. Disagreement among the apostles or between these two churches would be disquieting to Gentile converts everywhere because Antioch was a center of Gentile missions (13:1ff.). What affected them would have repercussions beyond them (15:23; 16:4).

Paul and the others went to Jerusalem (2) to clear up a misunderstanding, not to decide a doctrine. The Christians of Antioch had no way of knowing whether the Judaizing teachers had been approvingly sent by Jerusalem. Dealing with the problem openly (1) exonerated Jerusalem in the eyes of Antioch, (b) dispelled the fear that the two churches were divided on basic doctrine, and (c) provided a public occasion for the Jerusalem church generally to hear the discussion so others of them might be dissuaded from similar deviations. (d) Jerusalem leadership was made aware that men had gone out from them with this doctrine: “. . . we have heard . . . ” (15:24).

Paul and Barnabas had no uncertainty about their message. Antioch had always taken this position (Acts 11:19-26). God had confirmed their ministry by miraculous credentials (15:12). They were joyfully announcing the conversion of the Gentiles (15:3) even on the way to the conference on circumcision. The issue was not new or unsettled in light of the precedent with Cornelius (15:7-11; 10:1-11:18). Amos prophesied that the Gentiles (as Gentiles) would seek God and be called by his name (15:13-18; Amos 9:11-12). The Judaizers were subverting souls (15:24); scripture and precedent had settled the matter.<sup>42</sup>

The purpose of the meeting was to take public action on a settled issue, rather than official action on a new one.

Results of the conference

The meeting resulted in a decision on a course of action, a delegation to Antioch, and a “decree” to Syria and Cilicia. The decree was a confirmation, explanation, and exhortation rather than an edict.<sup>43</sup> It was a confirmation of Gentile freedom from the Mosaic law (15:29; cp. 20). It was an explanation that Jerusalem had not sent the Judaizers (15:23-27). It was an exhortation regarding general morality not to throw stumbling-blocks before Jews through indulgence in typical Gentile sins (15:28-29; cp. 20-21; 16:31-32).<sup>44</sup>

A written statement was prepared to provide something multiple. A delegation was sent to add personal authentication. Judas and Silas were official representatives of Jerusalem. To Antioch they were exhorters confirming especially the Gentiles in the faith.

The conference in Jerusalem openly clarified the position of the Jerusalem church on the question of circumcision for Gentiles, and showed that Jerusalem had not sent these men to Antioch with the message they were preaching. A letter and two prophets were sent to Antioch to make this fact as clear as possible.

The “Church of Judaea”

The “church of Judaea, Galilee, and Samaria” is to be taken generically rather than organizationally since the expression “churches of Judaea” occurs elsewhere.<sup>45</sup> In all other cases territorial references have “church” in the plural.<sup>46</sup> No known organizational office corresponds to this territory or any like it.

Summary

The following diagram pictures the original pattern of the church according to the evidence outlined in the preceding pages. The lines represent the flow of authority from Christ through the other levels of organization. Evangelist and prophet are viewed as basically general functions under the authority of the apostles. When they work locally, they are under the local leadership and are not themselves authoritative offices. All the general offices are universal offices.

Fig. 13. The Pattern of the Church

<sup>1</sup>Matthew 28:18-19; cp. 26:64; John 13:13; 17:2; Romans 14:9; 1 Corinthians 15:24-28; Ephesians 1:20-23; Philippians 2:5-11; Colossians 1:13-18; 1 Timothy 6:13-16; Hebrews 1:1-4; 1 Peter 3:22; see also Luke 1:32-33; 19:11-27; Revelation 11:15; 20: 4-6; 22:1-5

<sup>2</sup>Besides the twelve apostles Peter, Andrew, James, John, Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Thaddaeus, James the son of Alphaeus, Matthew, Simon Zelotes, and Judas Iscariot in Matthew 10:2-4, etc., “apostle” is applied to Matthias (Acts 1:26), Paul (Romans 1:1, etc.), Barnabas (Acts 14:4, 14; cp. 13:2; 1 Corinthians 9:5-6; Galatians 2:9), Apollos (1 Corinthians 4:6-9), Epaphroditus (Philippians 2:25), Andronicus and Junias (Romans 16:7), Silvanus and Timothy (1 Thessalonians 1:1 + 2:6), two unnamed men in 2 Corinthians 8:16-23; James the Lord’s brother (? Galatians 1:19); certain false apostles (2 Corinthians 11:13), and Christ himself (Hebrews 3:1).

<sup>3</sup>For the opposite view that all the apostles were characterized by the missionary calling carried out only in non-authoritative charisma, see J. C. Lambert, “Apostle,” ISBE, Vol. I, pp. 202-4. His principal error seems to be in forgetting that “apostle” in the special sense includes all the general meaning as well. There are two related reasons that more than fourteen men are called “apostles.” (1) The first is the missionary concept associated with the term. The activity to which it refers is the same as that of evangelist. The two words arise from different aspects of the whole activity: the “being sent” and the “good news” men were sent to declare. (2) Several of these men as members of the Pauline circle were extensions of the apostolic office and so bore the name of the office they were representing (see pp. 54-55).

<sup>4</sup>(1) Christ’s personal choice of the twelve is recorded in Matthew 10:1-4; Mark 3:13-19; Luke 6:12-16; John 6:70; 13:18 (15:16-17); Acts 1:2 + 13; 10:41; of Matthias in Acts 1:23-26 (“Lord . . . whom you [σὺ] choose”); of Paul in Acts 9:15; 13:2; 20:24; 26:16; Galatians 1:1, 16; 1 Timothy 1:1 (cp. Titus 1:3). (2) Seeing the resurrected Christ is mentioned as a qualification in Acts 1:22 (“witness with us of the resurrection”; cp. Luke 24:44-48; Acts 1:1-8; 2:32; 3:15; 4:19-20, 33 “their witness”; 5:32; 9:17; 10:39, 41; 13:31; 22:14-15; 23:11; 26:16; also John 1:14 + 1 John 1:1; 1 Peter 5:1 + 2 Peter 1:16-21). Paul associates his apostleship with seeing the Lord in 1 Corinthians 9:1 (probably meaning the resurrected Lord, though he may have seen Christ before). The Damascus experience was an objective event as indicated by the fact that Paul’s companions heard Christ’s voice (Acts 22:9; ἀκούω + acc.), without understanding it (Acts 9:7; ἀκούω + gen.), and saw the light (Acts 22:9. Paul himself was also physically blinded by the glory of the light (22:6, 11). It was the kind of seeing and hearing that enabled Paul to be a witness of what he had seen and heard (Acts 22:14-15), I being a peculiar word for the apostolic mission. Furthermore, in a table of post-resurrection appearances Paul lists himself last in parallel to the incidents recorded in the Gospels (1 Corinthians 15:1-8). That Paul’s apostleship was in the same sense as that of the Twelve is evident in Galatians 2:7-8. Other distinguishing marks of the apostles were (3) receiving their message directly from Christ through the Holy Spirit rather than through other men (John 16:13-15; Acts 1:8; Galatians 1:11-12; Ephesians 3:1-13; 1 Timothy 1:11); (4) being endowed directly with miraculous power (Acts 2) rather than through the laying on of hands (Acts 8:14-19) or perhaps prayer (1 Corinthians 14:14?); (5) being each one supernaturally endowed with the whole range of miraculous manifestation rather than with different particular gifts (1 Corinthians 12:28-31). The apostles were direct witnesses, directly chosen, informed, and endowed. (6) A secondary element mentioned in Acts 1:22-23—companying with Christ during His ministry (cp. Mark 3:4)—probably has the general force of not being a novice (cp. 1 Timothy 3:6). Paul fits even this stipulation at least in spirit. He was not a novice when he began his apostolic work, because ten to fourteen years intervened before the first missionary journey.

<sup>5</sup>The selection of Matthias accorded with divine sanction. Luke gives no reason to question it, recounting the use of scripture (Psalm 69:25 and 109:8) without demur and indicating implicit ratification by God in the miraculous endowment of chapter 2 as well as the explicit choice by the Lord in 1:23-26.

<sup>6</sup>The Great Commission was given directly and particularly to the apostles: Matthew 28:16; Mark 16:14; Acts 1:1-13 (cp. Luke 24:44-53), though of course by extension the work indicated involves all who labored under them from that day till this.

<sup>7</sup>Luke 22:25 (= Matthew 20:25; Mark 10:42); cp. 2 Corinthians 1:24; see 1 Peter 5:3 re elders.

<sup>8</sup>(a) Church office: Acts 11:30; 14:23; 15:2, 4, 6, 22, 23; 16:4; 20:17; 21:18; 1 Timothy 4:14 ( $\pi\tau\epsilon\sigma\beta\gamma\tau\epsilon\rho\iota\sigma$ ); 5:17, 19; Titus 1:5; James 5:14; 1 Peter 5:1; (b) the references to apostles (possibly to be included in the first listing): 1 Peter 5:1 ( $\sigma\mu\pi\tau\epsilon\sigma\beta\gamma\tau\epsilon\rho\sigma$ ); 2 John 1; 3 John 1; (c) Jewish elders: Matthew 16:21; 21:23; 26:3, 47, 57, 59; 27:1, 3, 12, 20, 41; 28:12; Mark 8:31; 11:27; 14:43, 53; 15:1; Luke 7:3; 9:22; 20:1; 22:52, 66 ( $\pi\tau\epsilon\sigma\beta\gamma\tau\epsilon\rho\iota\sigma$ ); Acts 4:5, 8, 23; 6:12; 22:5 ( $\pi\tau\epsilon\sigma\beta\gamma\tau\epsilon\rho\iota\sigma$ ); 23:14; 24:1; 25:15; (elders, tradition of: Matthew 15:2; Mark 7:3, 5); (d) men of old: Hebrews 11:2 (see in loco F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews: The English Text with Introduction, Exposition and Notes in The New International Commentary on the New Testament, ed. by F. F. Bruce); (e) old (wo)men: Luke 15:25; John 8:9; Acts 2:17; 1 Timothy 5:1, 2 (fem.); 1 Peter 5:5;  $\pi\tau\epsilon\sigma\beta\gamma\tau\epsilon\eta\varsigma$  Luke 1:18; Titus 2:2; Philemon 9;  $\pi\tau\epsilon\sigma\beta\gamma\tau\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ : Titus 2:3; (f) twenty-four elders of the Apocalypse: 4:4, 10; 5:5, 6, 8, 11, 14; 7:11, 13; 11:16; 14:3; 19:4.

<sup>9</sup>The following comments issue from a Pauline authorship framework despite frequent rejection of the pastorals as genuine products of the apostle himself. Among the writers on this question, Donald Guthrie is representative of those who favor Pauline authorship; see The Pastoral Epistles: An Introduction and Commentary in The Tyndale New Testament Commentaries, Vol. II: New Testament Introduction, pp. 198-236. Introductions by R. K. Harrison, Theodor Zahn, H. C. Thiessen, and others are on the same side of the issue. P. N. Harrison, in The Problem of the Pastoral Epistles, presents the early twentieth-century case for denial of Pauline authorship, especially on the basis of linguistic data.

A decision against Pauline authorship does not materially affect the point being made. It may, in fact, add weight to the argument, because non-Pauline authorship is usually accompanied by a later date of writing. The synonyms “elder” and “bishop” in the pastorals would then stand in more direct opposition to the later tendency to distinguish them by the same generations that were involved in formally delimiting the canon.

<sup>10</sup>1 Peter 5:2 uses the cognate verb  $\dot{\epsilon}\pi\tau\epsilon\kappa\omega\pi\epsilon\omega$  to speak of the elders’ “overseeing” ( $\dot{\epsilon}\pi\tau\epsilon\kappa\omega\pi\epsilon\eta\varsigma$ ), though Westcott and Hort in their text characteristically omit the word because of a preference for the joint reading of Codex Sinaiticus (firsthand) and Codex Vaticanus, which omit it. The Nestle text also omits it.

<sup>11</sup>The New Testament combines in distinguishing reference apostles and prophets (Ephesians 2:20; 3:5), apostles and elders (Acts 15:1-29); apostles, prophets, and teachers (1 Corinthians 12:28, 29); elders and deacons (1 Timothy 3:1-13), bishops and deacons (Philippians 1:1); apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastor-teachers (Ephesians 4:11); but never elders and bishops.

<sup>12</sup>As regards the origination of the term to alternate with  $\pi\tau\epsilon\sigma\beta\gamma\tau\epsilon\sigma$ , it should be observed (1) that all the usages are in primarily Gentile circumstances (Ephesus in Acts 20:18; 1

Timothy 3:2; Philippi in Philippians 1:1; Crete in Titus 1:7; Northern Asia Minor in 1 Peter 2:25. See J. B. Lightfoot, Saint Paul's Epistle to the Philippians: A Revised Text with Introduction, Notes and Dissertations, pp. 95-99, 193-94); and (2) that all these occurrences are after A.D. 60, by which time the church had become predominantly Gentile in composition. Πρεσβύτερος among the Gentiles was not so prominent a word for leaders; hence, a new term tended to develop among them. For further evidence identifying elder and bishop, see the sections “local” and “authoritative,” pp. 51-54.

<sup>13</sup>There is only one case that could be made to fit the idea of a bishop over the other elders: James, the brother of the Lord, who figured prominently in the conference on circumcision (Acts 15). Peter tells those gathered at Mary’s house to tell “James and the brethren” about his release (Acts 12:17). Paul went up to Jerusalem and visited “James, and all the elders were present” (Acts 22:17-26). He was a pillar of the Jerusalem church (Galatians 1:18-19; 2:9). This evidence would fit, but does not require, a bishop superior to his elders.

<sup>14</sup>See H. E. Dana and J. R. Mantey, A Manual Grammar of the Greek New Testament, p. 147; A. T. Robertson, A Grammar of the Greek New Testament, p. 785ff.; C. F. D. Moule, An Idiom Book of New Testament Greek, pp. 109-110. Among the New Testament examples of this idiom are the following: Mark 6:3; 12:33; Luke 6:49; 14:23; Acts 3:14; 1 Corinthians 4:9; 2 Corinthians 1:3; Galatians 1:7; Ephesians 1:3; 5:5; 6:21; Philippians 3:3; 4:20; Colossians 2:22; 1 Thessalonians 3:11; 2 Thessalonians 1:12; 1 Timothy 4:3; 6:15; Titus 2:13; Hebrews 3:1; James 3:9; 1 Peter 1:3; 2 Peter 1:1, 11; 2:20; 3:2, 18; Jude 4; Revelation 1:9; 3:17.

<sup>15</sup>Other instances of an article governing two or more groups are these: τὸν Πέτρον καὶ Ἰάκωβον καὶ Ἰωάννην (Matthew 24:3); τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καὶ γραμματέων (Mark 15:1); τὰς πλατείας καὶ ρύμας (Luke 14:21); τὰς φύλας καὶ γείτονας (Luke 15:9); τῶς Ἐπικουρείων καὶ Στοϊκῶν (Acts 17:18); τῶν Φαρισαίων καὶ Σαδδουκαίων (Acts 23:7); ἢ τε ἀίδιος αὐτοῦ δύναμις καὶ θειότης (Romans 1:20); τῆς ὑμῶν παρακλήσεως καὶ σωτηρίας (2 Corinthians 1:6); τὸ πλάτος καὶ μῆκος καὶ ὑψος καὶ βάθος (Ephesians 3:18); Philippians 1:7, 19, 20, 25; 2:17; Colossians 2:8; 1 Thessalonians 2:12; 3:7; 1 Peter 2:25; 2 Peter 1:10.

<sup>16</sup>The ruling idea is probably included in Acts 20:28, but the teaching element seems more basic there since Paul is concerned about false leaders drawing away disciples by speaking perverse things.

<sup>17</sup>Teaching is an activity involving most of the offices and functions so that elder-bishop-pastors teach, but they are not the only ones who teach (cp. 1 Timothy 2:7; 2 Timothy 1:11). Additional possibilities where elders may be in view are Acts 13:1; Romans 12:7; 1 Timothy 1:7; Hebrews 13:7, 17, 24). The other references for διδάσκαλος are general (Romans 2:20; Hebrews 5:12; Titus 2:3; 2 Peter 2:1).

<sup>18</sup>(a) Jerusalem: Acts 11:30; 15:2, 4, 6, 22, 23; 16:4; 21:18; Hebrews 13:7, 17, 24 (ἡγούμενοι; assuming a Jerusalem destination for Hebrews); (b) cities of southern Asia Minor established during Paul’s first missionary journey: Acts 14:23; Lystra or Iconium may be inferred from Acts 16:1-3 + 1 Timothy 4:14; (c) cities of northern Asia Minor: 1 Peter 5:1-4; (d) Ephesus: Acts 20:17, 28 (ἐπίσκοποι); 1 Timothy 1:7 (? teacher); 3:1-7 (ἐπίσκοποι); 5:17, 19; (e) Philippi: Philippians 1:1 (ἐπίσκοποι); (f) cities of Crete: Titus 1:5-9 (ἐπίσκοποι); (g) Rome: Romans 12:7-8 (διδάσκαλοι, προϊστάμενοι; (h) Antioch: Acts 13:1 (διδάσκαλοι); (i) Thessalonica: 1 Thessalonians 5:12.

<sup>19</sup>Of the five times ἐπίσκοπος occurs (Acts 20:28; Philippians 1:1; 1 Timothy 3:2; Titus 1:7; 1 Peter 2:25), the first two are plural and refer to bishops in Ephesus and Philippi respectively. The next two are articular generic references: “the bishop” (cp. Dana and Mantey, Manual Grammar, p. 144; see also Titus 1:5), the local range of references being Ephesus in 1 Timothy and “in every city” of Crete in Titus. The last occurrence of ἐπίσκοπος is a description of Christ rather than a label for an office. ἐπισκοπέω appears in Hebrews 12:15 and 1 Peter 5:2; ἐπισκοπή is used of this church office only in 1 Timothy 3:1. Luke 19:44; Acts 1:20; and 1 Peter 2:12 are the other references.

20 They are later called prophets (15:32); perhaps they were prophets-elders as the six in Acts 13:1 were prophets-teachers.

21 The ruling emphasis comes in Revelation 2:27; 12:5; and 19:15. Micah 5:2 (5:1 in Hebrew) predicts that out of Bethlehem will come one who would מֶלֶךְ Israel. מֶלֶךְ, the regular word for rule, is rendered ἄρχων (“ruler”) in the LXX and brought into Matthew 2:6 peripherastically under ἡγούμενος and ποιμαίνω. The feeding emphasis comes in Luke 17:7; 1 Corinthians 9:7; Jude 12; and probably John 21:16 and Revelation 7:17.

22 No particular significance is to be attached to the fact that in this verse Paul says “rule” (προΐστημι) with home and “take care of” (ἐπιμελέομαι) with church. In 5:17 of the same book he uses προΐστημι of elders. Paul is able to switch terms in 3:5 because both terms are applicable to either subject.

23 While the four words handled here do not always carry authority in their meaning reference, they are never used of any non-authoritative function in the church.

24 A fourth element especially important in determining the authoritative nature of the eldership lies in the theoretical premise that the highest present position in an authoritative system is itself authoritative. The premise is not invoked in the text at this point because it presupposes two propositions not demonstrated as yet: that evangelist is non-authoritative and that apostles have no successors.

25 The present writer is also inclined to consider the ἄγγελοι of the seven churches of Asia as evangelists (Revelation 1:20; 2:1, 8, 12, 18; 3:1, 5, 7, 14). (1) Ἅγγελος is a cognate of εὐαγγελιστής; (2) these persons were evidently not “guardian angels” since John is instructed to write to them. J. A. Seiss agrees that ἄγγελος refers to a minister though he calls the position “pastor”: The Apocalypse: A Series of Special Lectures on the Revelation of Jesus Christ with Revised Text, pp. 154-55.

26 The point here is the way a ministry is viewed as well as the way it operates. Over a period of fifteen years a man may serve as elder in three churches, An evangelist during the same period of time might minister in three localities. The difference is that eldership arises from within a community of believers; an evangelist comes from without. The evangelist circuits as an evangelist but an elder as an elder does not. When he changes residence, he does not automatically become an elder in the second church. He first identifies himself as a part of that community and may then be chosen to serve as elder there. The evangelist changes residence because he has changed ministry; the elder changes ministry because he has changed residence. As they work, elders and evangelists may do many of the same things.

27 Appointment is to be distinguished from selection if Acts 6:3 is any indication of the total process. Titus may be viewed as conducting the installation for which he exhorted the audience to make selections. The President is sworn in by the Chief Justice, but he is not under the authority of the latter.

28 In Titus 2:15 Paul tells Titus to rebuke with all authority (ἐπιταγή). The right to do such may rest on the basis of (a) service rendered, (b) the truth involved, or (c) the position held. The last of these coincides with office. Paul probably has the second of these in mind since he is speaking of general moral matters.

<sup>29</sup>In the modern day, the activity of evangelist is of course adjusted as a result of the absence of the apostles so that he can no longer serve as a geographical extension of an apostle's ministry. His work now is carried on through the power of his own person under the authority of, and to the extent of, the apostolic word.

<sup>30</sup>Matthew 1:2; 2:5, 15, 17, 23; 3:3; 4:14; 5:12, 17; 7:12; 8:17; 10:41; 11:13; 12:17, 30; 13:17, 35; 16:4, 14; 21:4; 22:40; 23:29, 30, 31; 24:15; 26:56; 27:9, 35; Mark 1:2; 13:14; Luke 1:70; 3:4; 4:17, 27; 6:23; 9:8, 19; 10:24; 11:29, 47, 50; 13:28, 34; 16:16, 29, 31; 18:31; 24:25, 27, 44; John 1:23, 45; 6:45; 8:52, 53; 12:38; Acts 2:16, 30; 3:18, 21, 24, 25; 7:42, 48, 52; 10:43; 13:5, 20, 27, 40; 15:15; 24:14; 26:22, 27; 28:23, 25; Romans 1:2; 3:21; 11:3; Hebrews 1:1; 11:32; James 5:10; 1 Peter 1:10; 2 Peter 2:16; 3:2; Revelation 10:7; 11:18(?); 16:6(?).

<sup>31</sup>Matthew 11:92; 14:5; 21:26; Mark 11:32; Luke 7:26, 28; 20:6.

<sup>32</sup>Matthew 13:57; 21:11, 46; Mark 6:4, 15; 8:28; Luke 1:76; 4:24; 7:16, 39; 13:33; 24:19; John (1:21, 25) 4:19, 44; 6:14; 7:40 (52); 9:17; Acts 3:22, 23; 7:37.

<sup>33</sup>Matthew 23:34 and Luke 11:49 (?); Acts 11:27; 13:1; 15:32; 21:10; 1 Corinthians 12:28, 29; 14:29, 32, 37; Ephesians 2:20; 3:5; 4:11; Revelation 18:20. Προφητεύω, “prophesy,” refers to the church in Acts 2:17, 18; 19:6; 21:6; 1 Corinthians 11:4, 5; 13:9; 14:1, 3, 4, 5, 24, 31, 39; Revelation 10:11. Προφητεία, “prophecy,” occurs in Romans 12:6; 1 Corinthians 12:10; 13:2, 8; 14:6, 22; 1 Thessalonians 5:20; 1 Timothy 1:18; 4:14; Revelation 1:3; 22:7, 10, 18, 19.

<sup>34</sup>Luke 11:49; Ephesians 2:20; 3:5; Revelation 18:20.

<sup>35</sup>Acts 13:1; Romans 12:6-7; 1 Corinthians 12:28, 29; Ephesians 4:11.

<sup>36</sup>Cp. perhaps Stephen in Acts 6-7; for a description of deacon see infra.

<sup>37</sup>Re Romans 16:1, see in loco William Sanday and Arthur C. Headlam, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, in The International Critical Commentary on the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, ed. by Charles Augustus Briggs, Samuel Rolles Driver, and Alfred Plummer. For the passages in 1 Timothy see in loco William Hendriksen, Exposition of the Pastoral Epistles, in New Testament Commentary. Διάκονος in Romans 15:1, however, could be used in the descriptive, non-official sense of “worker.” In 1 Timothy 3:11 γυναῖκας could be taken in its usual meaning of “wives” (i.e., of the deacons), as the Authorized Version translates: “their wives.” Calvin and others correctly understand 1 Timothy 5 in reference, not necessarily to widows serving as “deaconesses,” but to widows supported by the church. In 1 Timothy 3 Paul is talking about selecting persons. In 1 Timothy 5 he is talking about accepting applicants. Relevant passages among early Christian writers are Tertullian, On the Veiling of Virgins 9 (A.D. 200); Apostolic Constitutions 3:7, 15; 8:19, 20, 28.

<sup>38</sup>In that διάκονος is grammatically masculine or feminine (Romans 16:1) depending on the accompanying article, one is tempted in 1 Timothy 3:8 to consider the anarthrous usage as a cover for both. Under this view 3:8-10, containing nothing peculiarly masculine, would speak of the deacons' qualifications generally; 3:11 would be directed to women, 3:12-13 to men. If this analysis were correct, it would illustrate textually the relationship of deacon and deaconess as diagrammed above. The presence of “similarly,” or “in like manner” (ώσαύτως), after γυναῖκας (3:10), however, implies that γυναῖκας stands in parallel to διακόνους in 3:8. (Note that ώσαύτως links the ἐπίσκοποι of 3:1-7 with διακόνους in 3:8. Likewise ώσαύτως puts γυναῖκας and διάκονος together in 3:12.) Consequently, it seems best to view both 3:8-10 and 3:12-13 as directed to men and 3:1 to women, whether “deaconesses” or wives of deacons.

Certain correspondences between 1 Timothy 3:1-13 and Titus 1:5-2:8 might be observed if 1 Timothy 3:11 refers to women, rather than wives of deacons: (1) cp. 1 Timothy 3:1-7 and Titus 1:5-2:2; (2) cp. 1 Timothy 3:8-10, 12-14 and Titus 2:6-8; (3) cp. 1 Timothy 3:11 and Titus 2:3-5.

<sup>39</sup>Dated after A.D. 49, Galatians 2:1-10 is often considered another account of the Jerusalem conference; cp. Henry Clarence Thiessen, Introduction to the New Testament, pp. 216-18. In Galatians: The Charter of Christian Liberty, pp. 97-109, Merrill C. Tenney argues for a date previous to the conference.

<sup>40</sup>Frederic W. Farar in The Story of St. Paul, p. 253, though himself an archdeacon in the Church of England, agreed here, “The so-called Council of Jerusalem in no way resembles the General Councils of the Church, either in its history, its constitution, or its object. It was not a convention of ordained delegates, but a meeting of the entire Church of Jerusalem to receive a deputation from the Church at Antioch.”

<sup>41</sup>A break may perhaps be made after 15:5 so as to eliminate the statement about the converted Pharisees from the account of the meeting, but “the multitude” in 15:12 and “the whole church” in 15:22 seem to indicate that it was an open, informal, unofficial discussion.

<sup>42</sup>“Wherefore I judge that we not trouble them” does not state a new decision or make a motion, but expresses the conclusion inherent in matters mentioned previously. James seems to be “answering” in 15:13 the proposition of the Pharisees in 15:5 and so is addressing them more than those with whom he agreed. Peter seems to be addressing the Pharisees also when he says to his antagonists, “So now why are you tempting God by laying on the neck of the disciples a yoke that neither our fathers nor we were strong enough to carry?” The “coming to one accord” in 15:25 may mean doctrinal accord between the Pharisees and the others, or procedural accord as to what should be done to counteract their influence.

<sup>43</sup>The word δόγμα (16:4) is capable of being used appropriately for authoritative proclamation of rulers (Luke 2:1; Acts 17:7) and for authoritative elements of law (Ephesians 2:15; Colossians 2:14). Authority in such cases is decisive from the circumstance of usage, to which one must ultimately appeal for a word’s normal meaning anyway. Derivationally δόγμα is a noun of δοκέω meaning “to seem best.” Δοκέω is used in Acts 14:28, “It seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us”; and may be used in 16:4 on that account. There was authority here by virtue of the Holy Spirit, the apostles of the universal church, and the Jerusalem elders over those who went out in their name, but no authority of Jerusalem over other churches or this conference per se over the whole church.

<sup>44</sup>“Laying on them [ἐπιτίθημι]” in 15:28 is as colorless regarding the legislative and executive action of councils as “enjoining by writing” (ἐπιστέλλω) in the 15:20 parallel. “Laying on” picks up Peter’s terminology in 15:10, where he speaks of laying on the yoke of law. So the “laying on” in 15:28 stands in contrast to, and less than, the laying on of law. “No greater burden than these necessary things” (15:28-29) refers to matters of basic morality true even before the law or the gospel, as distinguished from a positive ordinance like circumcision, whereby a man became debtor to do the whole law (Galatians 5:3). The yoke of faith (15:11), which is taken on, is easier, lesser, lighter (Matthew 11:29-30) than the yoke of law and may be laid on by charismatic proclamation aside from supervisory authority both in the initial acceptance and subsequent obedience. Since those who had gone out from Jerusalem were involved in doctrinal error, something had to be said about Jerusalem’s position on these matters. “In contrast to what the Judaizing teachers have laid on you, we lay on you only these necessary things.” No positive argument for authoritative, conciliar action can come then from Acts 15:28.

<sup>45</sup>Galatians 1:22; 2 Thessalonians 2:14.

<sup>46</sup>See Chapter III, fnt. 12.